A GOOD FAMILY COUGH SYRUP

Can be made by mixing Pine-Tar, Aconite, Sugar, Hyoscyamus, Sassafras, Peppermint, Ipecac, Rhubarb, Mandrake, Capsicum Muriate, Ammonia, Honey and Glycerine. It is pleasant, healing and soothing, raises the phlegm, and gives almost instant relief. For convenience of those who prefer not to fuss, it is supplied ready made in 25c bottles under name of Dr. Bell's Pine-Tar-Honey. Can be had at your druggist. Insist on getting Dr. Bell's Pine-Tar-Honey and see that the formula is on the package.—Adv. 4-11-1m

TALE OF "MOTHER HUBBARD"

Its First Entrance into Hawaii and the Eternal Favor Which It Gained Thereby.

There is a story, vouched for by an American, who lives in Hawaii, of the influence of the Mother Hubbard there.

Years ago, the story goes, an American was organizing a sewing class among the native Hawaiian women. At that time they gowned themselves in seaweed and strings of shells, and the American wanted to teach them to make more substantial clothes for their own use. So she sent home to the United States and asked that a pattern of the simplest garment possible be sent her—something so easy that even fingers that had never before wielded a needle could follow it. The Mother Hubbard had but recently made its appearance, and a pattern of this new and simple garment was sent to the worker in Hawaii. Hawaiian women by the score emerged from seaweed fringe into cotton Mother Hubbards, and a white cotton gown modeled on this famous original became practically the national feminine attire of the islands.

To this day you cannot persuade a native Hawaiian woman of the lower classes that the Mother Hubbard is not the native dress of American women. They have never changed their habit of wearing a cotton Mother Hubbard as a badge of civilization.

Will Kill Germs on Pencils.

Of the 50,000 school children in this country who are the annual victims of preventable disease, there is no doubt that a goodly per cent of them contracted disease from the habit of sucking the points of pencils passed from hand to hand.

To prevent this transmission of deadly germs of preventable diseases a new device has just been invented, says an exchange.

It is a specially constructed rack upon which pencils collected from the children can be placed with the tips resting in sockets where they are acted upon by a formalin gas disinfectant, which kills all germs.

To get the best and safest results two sets of pencils should be kept on hand. While one set is in use the other can be undergoing disinfecting. Thus by changing pencils twice a day the danger of the spread of germs can be cut in half.

AVOID SPRING COLDS

Sudden changes, high winds, shifting seasons cause colds and grippe, and these spring colds are annoying and dangerous, and are likely to turn into a chronic summer cough. In such cases take a treatment of Dr. King's New Discovery, a pleasant Laxative Tar Syrup. It soothes the cough, checks the cold and helps break up an attack of grippe. It's already prepared, no mixing or fussing. Just ask your druggist for a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery. Tested and tried for over 40 years.—Adv. d-w

PEARL WHITE

WHEN PEARL WHITE, the heroine of "The Iron Claw," saw that Arthur Stringer, the author of this serial, proposed to have her jump from the Palisades into the early spring waters of the Hudson River, she indited the following lines of reproval and promptly sent them on to the author in question:

"Honest, Arthur, hear my plea,
Or you'll prove the death of me!
Say, remember this is March
And there's ice by High Bridge arch!
Put that high-dive stuff away,
Till at least the end of May!
Can that Hudson swimming, please,
Till the leaves are on the trees;
Shift the time, rewrite the part,
But have a heart, man, have a heart!"

To this invocation from the Pathe star the author of "The Iron Claw," sent back the following reply:

Fearless, peerless, reckless Pearl,
More a sea-bird than a girl,
More a wisp of flying spray
Than a child of mortal clay,
Dodging bullets, dishing trains,
Leaping slap through window-panes,
Smashing motor-cars kerflop,
Always coming out on top,
Trapped by villains black with gore,
Giving same the slip once more,
Gaily facing a la mode
Perils through each episode,
Can't you see I have to do
What the world expects of you,
And that spirits more sedate
In your trials luxuriate,
And the hum-drum, commonplace,
Hearts of hum-drum mortals race,
Madder, quicker, at the sight
Of our plot-immured Pearl White?
For the Claw that drags you back,
Leaves them gasping on the rack,
And each plunge you take, dear maid,
Though from roadster, Palisade,
Or from studio river-bank
Plump into the Pathe tank,
Warns them to their very toes,
Making cock-tails of your woes—
Therefore, though the chill Atlantic
Ice-floes drive you nearly frantic,
Jump you must into that river,
That we all may share your shiver!

CUPID AND DAD

By MABLE GRAHAM KNIPE.

"Who's going to take you to the dance tonight?" asked Emily Barnes' mother at the supper table.

Emily hesitated a moment. "Mr. Sands," she replied finally. Her father looked up interestedly.

"That young chap who's trying scientific farming on the Williams' place? I must be on hand to meet him tonight."

"Now, daddy, dear, please don't start that again," pleaded Emily. "Every time a really nice young man comes to see me, you get busy. You act as if he was your long-lost son-in-law, and, of course, that disgusts any decent fellow. What makes you do it?"

"It's this way," placidly explained her father. "Your grandfather was always so cool to me each time I went courting your mother that it made me wider than ever to get her, so I decided I'd use the other plan and be so polite to the young chaps that they'd quit coming for lack of opposition. I don't want to lose my little girl yet."

Then and there Emily resolved that if it were possible, she would keep her father and young Sands apart. If they never met, she reasoned, then her father could not, by his extremely clever methods, disgust him so he would come no longer.

Accordingly that evening she met the young man at the door with:

"I'm all ready, you see."

"Am I late?" he asked, with a bewildered look at her cloak and gloves. "Not at all. But Mrs. Carman asked me to come early to help her with the decorations. Lovely night, isn't it?" as she descended the steps with the astonished, but distinctly happy Mr. Sands.

Many were the subtleties to which Emily was forced to resort in the next few weeks to keep her father and young Sands apart, but always she succeeded. Each day the young man was growing more devoted and appearing at her side whenever she ventured outside her gate.

Came the first day of May, fragrant with apple blossoms and musical with the hum of bees. The young people planned a May day picnic. The girls were to spend the afternoon gathering wild flowers in the woods near the village, and at supper time the young men were to appear, carrying the baskets of lunch previously prepared by the feminine contingent.

At five o'clock of the eventful day, the girls, laden with spring blossoms, were grouped about Mrs. Carter, their jolly little chaperone, watching the group of youths hastening down the road toward them.

"Here we are!" shouted Joe Baker. "I made them let me lead the procession after Billy Sands had to fall out, and I had to carry two baskets."

"Where is Billy Sands?" asked everybody all at once.

"At home, nursing a sick cow or a silo, or something. Anyway, it's something that swallowed an ear of corn or a can of soup or something," answered truthful Joe. "They came running out for him as we passed his farm. He was awfully sorry to miss the fun—I speak for his piece of cake now," he finished, thereby starting a young riot.

Emily's lips were smiling, but her heart felt queer and heavy as she gathered the bottle of olives and escaped to a broad stump to open them.

"What is the matter with me?" she asked herself desperately. "I never was this upset about a man before. If it hurts this much now, what will it be when father sends him right about face? There's just one thing to do and that is to quit him right now."

She returned the olives to the noisy youngsters around the campfire and murmured about going to the spring to wash her hands.

Even at that distance the laughing voices sounded plainly, drowning the noise of approaching footsteps.

Then a voice at Emily's shoulder began: "Miss Emily, I'm so sorry!"

and she turned to find the only man in the world close beside her.

"Oh," she said, and held out her hands as a child might have done. The man, with a choking cry of "Sweetheart!" gathered them close.

Then he blurted out boyishly: "I've met your father."

"Not really?" she gasped.

Young Sands was amazed.

"You don't understand, sweetheart," he explained. "He—he liked me. I know he did. I'd always been afraid he despised me, because—because you never introduced me to him."

Emily was sobbing now, her face in her hands. She believed she could see in advance the sordid finish to her fairy story.

"Are you crying because I met your father?" asked Billy Sands quietly.

"Yes," gulped Emily truthfully.

The young man grasped a tree trunk for support.

"Perhaps you'd rather I went away where I could not trouble you and your people," he hazarded shakily.

"If you only would," choked Emily. "I'll do it," he promised. "I love you well enough for even that."

Emily's hands fell away, her wet little face aglow with joy.

"Honestly, Billy? Then it doesn't matter if father does make a parade over you." And she finished her stammering story on his shoulder, his arms tightly holding her.

"The sly old fox," laughed joyous Billy Sands.
